MESSAGE FROM OUR SSWDA HISTORIAN

A check in the amount of $108.21 has been sent to our Society treasurer for the profit from the England CD. This amount includes $15.00 in donations that were added to the checks. The profit was higher than expected as we were able to purchase some of the supplies while they were on sale. A "thank you" email has been sent to David Westcott in England for his generous offer of the information.

The computer CD will still be available and several will be for sale at the Reunion in Kansas City.

Betty W. Acker,
Historian

MESSAGE FROM OUR SSWDA PRESIDENT

Thanksgiving is just around the corner and I'm sure each family is planning a big get together. The first Thanksgiving started in New England and I am sure our ancestors were very much a part of making it a special family day.

With the Reunion only a short time away, I hope some Chapter or cousin is making plans to volunteer to host the next Reunion in 2006. It seems as though it is a long time away but time has a way of flying by. This would be an excellent way of showing off your home area and state. I am sure the cousins would enjoy a new and different part of our great country.

I have appointed Michelle McKenzie to the position of Webmaster in place of Sharon Coltey until the Reunion in Kansas City when the next election will take place. I wish to thank both Michelle and Sharon for all they have done for the Society Web Page.

Best wishes for the coming holidays.

Barlow Westcott,
President

ANNIVERSARIES - FELIXES' 60th

James and Pauline Felix of Escondido, California celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary June 29, 2003 with a family reunion in Carson City, Nevada.

Pauline and James Felix

The couple were married June 29, 1943, in Camp Hood, Texas. They have lived in Escondido for 43 years.

They have three children; Linda Freshwater of Oceanside, James Felix Jr. of Scripps Ranch and Jeffrey Felix of Escondido. They also have eight grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

James is the owner of Felix Insurance Services. Pauline is a homemaker.

FROM THE LETTER BOX

I joined the Westcott Society around 1958, I think. My mother was born Katharine Elizabeth Wescott on 3 June 1905 in Duluth, Minnesota. She married Francis Getty Bentley 15 February 1936 in Houghton, Michigan and she died 19 September 1986 in Louisville, Kentucky. She is buried in Houghton, Michigan with her parents George Hender Wescott and Fannie Elizabeth Alderman.

Since I retired I have had more time for genealogy. I received the first Distinguished Service Award of the Kentucky Society of Colonial Wars for over 25 years as their registrar. I was registrar of the Kentucky Society Sons of the American Revolution for over 20 years and served two terms as Governor of the Kentucky Society of Mayflower Descendants. Currently, I am completing papers for the General Society War of 1812 and for the Order of the Crown of Charlemagne.

Over the years since the 1970's, I taught genealogy at Bellarmine College and the University of Louisville and have given programs on Kentucky research at several of the National Genealogical Society's annual meetings and to the Texas, Indiana, Virginia, Chicago, St. Louis and other genealogical societies.

I always look forward to the newsletter.

BASKETS FOR THE HARVEST

Austin Westcott holds one of the baskets that was produced at his Kingsville, Ohio factory for nearly 30 years. Westcott says the factory also produced specialty baskets and wooden crates for area apple and root vegetable growers. The factory shut down in 1974.

At the crest of a hill southeast of the Interstate 90/Route 193 interchange at Kingsville, Ohio, a stand of trees marks the location of what was a thriving manufacturing business four decades ago.

It is fitting that trees have reclaimed this land, for in its time the industry consumed a truck load of hardwood logs every two weeks. It employed up to 19 workers at the peak of its operation and generated about $350,000 in annual sales. Its products were shipped out by the box-car load, yet today its owner has to poke around the nooks of his garage to find just a couple examples of the woven baskets that were produced here.

The Kingsville Basket Factory was founded and operated by Austin Westcott, who, at 94, still lives on the property that was home to the factory. Austin started the factory in 1958 and ran it until 1974. Austin started making baskets after he was laid off from a factory job in the mid-1950s. "I thought there was a market for it, all I had to do was find the materials," Austin says. In 1955, Austin ordered some basket-making materials from a factory in Ripley, New York, and started weaving the baskets in his home. He sold them to produce growers in the community. Austin says he probably sold his first baskets, peck-sized ones, for around $1 a dozen. Every basket was woven and assembled by hand.

Two years after getting into the business, Austin expanded by purchasing the machinery to cut his own veneer from logs, clip the veneer to the proper widths and lengths, and staple the components. An assembly line was created. First was the weaver, who laid out the basic weave of the veneer strips in a square-braid pattern. A second worker stapled the strips on the sides of the weave. The sheet was then folded over a wooden form to create the basket, then handles were added and baskets nested four to a nest. Austin built the forms that the woven strips were pressed around. The veneer strips were cut by the lathe operator, a position usually filled by Austin. His lathe could accommodate log lengths of up to 39 inches and diameters of about 20 inches. The lathe ran at 300 RPM as a knife cut the veneer from the log. When the knife had cut away all but a 4.5-inch core, the lathe was stopped and core removed. Cutting any closer to the core risked nicking the blade. The business thus generated a large quantity of these cores ranging in length from about two to three feet. Austin had a sawmill custom built so he could saw the cores into lumber. This lumber was used to build bushel crates that were popular with lake-shore apple growers and root-crop growers in swamp gardens south of Orwell.

The factory also produced veneer scrap and sawdust. The sawdust went to an organic farmer, the veneer was used to heat the building and the vat of water in which the logs, cut into "bolts", had to be softened before they could be cut down on the lathe.

Austin says only tulip tree (poplar) and basswood could be used without soaking. Green timber was essential. "The best time to cut them was after the sap had gone down in October," he says. "Those logs would keep until June." But if you cut a log in June, you'd better use it up real quick. It wouldn't keep a month." Just about any hardwood log provided good basket material except oak and ash, they were too brittle. Austin purchased a truck-load of logs every two weeks. The load would supply enough veneer to make about 2,000 dozen peck baskets.

The type of baskets turned out by the factory varied with the season and their destination. Beginning shortly after the first of the year, the factory focused production on its annual order for a New York broker who sold the baskets to New England growers. They were 8- and 12-quart baskets. The factory shipped 14 to 19 40- and 50-foot railroad car loads from the Nickel Plate Railroad freight depot in Kingsville every spring. Each car held more than 12,000 baskets.

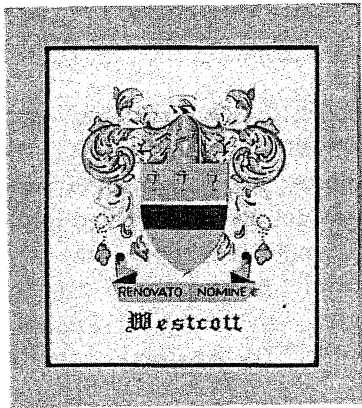

The factory's line included square-braid baskets ranging in size from 1 to 24 quarts. It also produced a 4-quart round basket with dyed materials, and specialty baskets, like a pansy container for an Olmstead Falls grower and a tray that held a dozen plants in 2-inch pots.

Although all traces of the factory are gone, except for the steel vat now covered by the vegetation, Austin still weaves baskets as a winter pastime.
